Dear /r/Subaru: I was curious to know if it was possible to replace the turbo Forester's stock CVT with the 6-speed manual that is found in the BRZ. I was hoping that since both models have the same engine, it would be the relatively easiest way to have a manual transmission in the new turbo Forester. Thank you for your advice, Butters

Check the Forester forums for more specifics. But it should be identical to going from auto to manual in an Impreza. You will need the drive train components as well as the clutch pedal assembly which is all in one (brake, throttle, clutch) and you will need a slave cylinder. You might actually need an ECU from a manual trans Forester as well.
